

Before Jesus went to the cross, and shortly before he was betrayed, Jesus spent time with his heavenly Father in prayer. He knew his job on earth was almost over. Soon, he would become the “Lamb of God, who takes away the sins of the world” as prophesied by John the Baptist. (John 1:29)

Jesus had just spent three years in ministry, choosing the twelve disciples, eleven of whom would continue in his steps, and ultimately change the world. Soon he would go to his death, and the whole world would change the way it measured time itself.

It is important to know what was on Jesus’ mind as he faced the culmination of his time on earth. His thoughts and prayers for his disciples, for himself, and importantly, those who would follow the disciples into a relationship with Jesus. Many people were destined to become Christians, and Jesus prayed especially for them, that all of us would be one. One people. With one purpose. With one heart beating in love for the one true Father of us all.

Nobody knew what this ragtag group of believers would be able to accomplish. Jesus told his closest followers about a Counselor who would come and remind them of everything Jesus had ever said. That Counselor, the Holy Spirit, would work a miracle in the lives of the early church. It would bring together people from every nation on earth, making them brothers and sisters, giving them a lifelong purpose of honoring God, and serving others.
